

What is the goal here?

T e e a a b e

What are some of the current consumption and production patterns that need to change?

The average American consumes 100 times more energy than the average person in a developing country. The average American consumes 100 times more energy than the average person in a developing country. The average American consumes 100 times more energy than the average person in a developing country.

When we look at the energy consumption patterns of different countries, we see that the United States is a major energy consumer. The United States is a major energy consumer. The United States is a major energy consumer.

Source: US/MCID BDC BT11.f 11.e2 e ed1T11. 9 e -US/MCI -US/MCI